any branch of the theatrical profes-sion, Miss Carmen says: "Do not get an inflated idea of your own importheels, ready and alert to take advan-low a tage of every misstep. They are not atre. They are a mighty force and from the lowest to the highest do their might to build or destroy. Think of the many—and I am sorry to say that they are in the majority—that have dropped by the wayside only half successful, through utter disregard of the masses. When their combined energy could have been converted into mighty engine to assist in the uphill fight, by a little consideration—a litle appreciation of the fact that they are human beings, whether they are a beginner in the chorus or a star tenor. Their boosting is always es-sential—when the top is attained a step slide looms up on the other side, and it only takes a slight push to start a down hill journey, where the momentum is ten thousand times greater than the climb. To accomplish this it is not necessary to love your dignity, or to make associates with every Tom. Dick and Harry—just make them feel when they cross your track that they too are real—make them feel that they are all your friends and sooner or later you will feel the benefit for they never forget."

WHERE HAVE THEY GONE?

What's become of the Star in the East! Has battle smoke of wars Obscured its beam in the crown of night, While doomed men in red darkness (With a groping sense of wrong or right)
And clench and die ber ti right)
nd clench and die, by the lurid blight
Of the bloody eye of Mars?

There are the reverend wise men gong Where are the reverend wise men gone
Who followed the Bethlehem star?
Did they flee in fright from its gleaming road
When dim at its end the dark cross stood?
Have they lost their way in the bleak,
black wood?
Have they ridden to hounds and tasted
blood?
Are the "Wise Men" gone to war?

Where's the Virgin Mother now?
Who bided last at the cross?
Bebold, she waits as she waited then,
Her soul in travail of birth again,
For every woman's a mother of men,
And each her son, when a man is slain,
Be she maid in her vestal floss,
From "Brotherhood," by Ruth MeEnery Stuart, in the North American Roview.

Now I have come to a little green way And I set down my pack in the twillgh Now I have come to a silver bright And I lie on the moss by its brink for a dream, oh, dream that I dream by the little as I set down my pack by the twilight so gray: Dreams that I dream by the little green shore,

So I wake and I wander again on my wanter again on my road.

With my pack on my back and each day a fresh load;

And I wonder and wonder some day when I lie

With the shadows above and no light in my eye;

When I lie, little heart, in the silence with thee;
And I hope and I trust it will be, it will seem Like a life unto life and a dream unto -Baltimore Sun.
